Looking for Disability Information? Try LINCS!

What is LINCS? LINCS is the Local Information Network for Community Services, a database created by the Data Diction company. The members of the Network include local councils and disability information groups throughout Sydney and NSW on the www.lincs.com.au website.

What is on the Community and Disability Database?
The database consists of descriptions of community based organisations and groups throughout the Northern Beaches, Sydney and beyond. LINCS members contribute to the database by collecting and updating entries in their geographical area. Categories include topics like Leisure and sporting groups, Education or Employment, Personal and Family Services, Law and Justice, Special Interest Groups, Equipment and disability Aids.

How does one use LINCS?
• You can access the database through each member’s homepage via any computer with Internet access.
• The right side of the database’s first page has a list of search words. The page has hints on search procedure.
• Searches are done on a geographic basis by distance from the specified suburb. So Warringah Council’s website will bring up entries closest to Dee Why, while searches through Pittwater or Manly Councils’ websites will bring up entries closest to Mona Vale or Manly. The centre of this search can be changed on the line below the search field.
• For example, if you live in Narrabeen, have a mobility disability and need transport, search www.wls.nsw.gov.au/disabilityinformation.htm by using keywords Disability Transport and suburb Narrabeen.

How can I provide new or changed information?
If some information needs to be changed or added, contact the nearest LINCS member (Council or disability service). In the Northern Beaches, these are:
